Contents:- • Introduction • Materials used • Heat treatment • Classification • Nomenclature - Instrument formula • Instrument parts • Measuring gauges • Types of hand cutting instruments • Hand instrument technique • Sharpening hand instruments • Sterilization and disinfection . Summary and conclusion • References

The term "instrument" refers to a tool, device or implement used for specific purpose or type of work and is preferred in professional or scientific fields as precision items are generally required to perform specific procedures.

Hand cutting instruments are manufactured from two main materials: • Stainless steel . Carbon steel
Some instruments are made with carbide inserts to provide more durable cutting edge. - Hard and wear resistant but is brittle too.

Stainless steel Chromium 18% Carbon 1% Iron 81-81.4% Adv:- - Chromium in the alloy reduces the corrosion tendency by depositing an oxide layer on the surface of the metal. - Remains bright under most conditions. Disadv:- - Loses a keen edge during much use. Mainly used for working points and cement instruments. Other alloys: Alloys of nickel, cobalt or chromium are used in the manufacture of hand instruments.

ACCORDING TO STURDEVANT: Cutting (Excavators, Chisels and others) Non-cutting (Amalgam condensers, mirrors, explorers, probes)

Restoring instruments: - Mixing instruments -Cement spatula - Agate spatula - Plastic carrying/ filling instruments - Packing Instruments -Amalgam carrier - Condensing instruments - Round condenser - Parallelogram condenser - Burnishing instruments

G.V. Black prescribed four classes similar to biological classification

a. First unit - Width of the blade in tenths of a millimeter. b. Second unit - Angle the cutting edge forms with the axis of the handle in centigrades. c. Third unit - Length of the blade in millimeter.

CONTRA ANGLE AND BALANCE • The term "Contra - Angle" refers to a shank in which two or more angles are necessary to alignment with (within 2-3mm) the axis of the handle.

Functional end of the instrument that bears the cutting edge. • It is connected to the handle by the shank. • For non-cutting instruments, the part corresponding to the blade is termed "Nib". Working surface or the end of the nib is known as the "face".

Single bevelled - Bibevelled - Triple bevelled (1 primary and 2 secondary bevels). - Circumferentially bevelled

DIRECT CUTTING • Force is applied in the same plane as that of the blade and handle . Straight blade (single plane). All the curves and the angles in the shank are in the same plane as the handle.

• Used in direct & lateral cutting.

Blade is shorter as compared to straight chisel. - Single angle in the shank to enhance the convenience form. - Used with push stroke or lateral scraping action.

HOE Difference between mono angle chisel and hoe - If the angle of the blade is less than 12.5 centigrades, it is mono angle chisel and if it is more than 12.5 centigrades, it is hoe

Two angles in the shank. - Used to cleave or split undermined enamel.

Shank and blade are curved. -Bevelled on one side of blade only (mesial or distal bevel). - Used for cleaving undermined enamel and for shaping walls. - Single instrument with 3 cutting motion

Instruments having the cutting edge perpendicular to the axis of the handle such as bin-angle chisels, those with a slight blade curvature (Wedelstaedt chisels), and hoes are single-beveled and not designated as rights or lefts, but as having a mesial bevel or a distal bevel.

Cutting edge of the instrument is parallel to the axis of the instrument. - Cutting edge of the instrument is at right angle to the axis of blade. - Length of blade is very small -Bibevelled - Single ended

Enamel hatchet:- - Cutting edge of the instrument is parallel to the axis of the instrument. - Cutting edge of the instrument is at right angle to the axis of blade. - Monobevelled - Single plane instrument - Paired instrument

Gingival margin trimmer - Cutting edge of the instrument is parallel to the axis of the instrument. - Cutting edge of the instrument is at an angle other than a right angle to the blade. - Modified hatchet - Binangle instrument - Monobevelled - Double plane instrument (better lateral scraping efficiency/ scooping effect).

4 unit instrument formula - Mesial pair - 10-80-6-8(95)

Used to give 1. gingival cavo surface bevel. 2. for rounding or bevelling axio-pulpal line angle. The 100 and 75 pairs are for inlay/onlay preparations with steep gingival bevels. The 90 and 85 pairs are for amalgam preparations with gingival enamel bevels that decline gingivally only slightly.

Off-angle hatchet:- - Instruments in which blade is rotated by 45 degrees from the plane of the long axis of the instrument. - Used to create and shape specific angulations for cavity walls, especially in areas of difficult access.

Spoon excavator:- - Double ended instrument. - Binangle/ Triple-angle instrument - Paired (right and left). - Double plane instrument - Circumferentially bevelled. - Cutting edge either circular (discoid) or claw like (cleoid). Use:- Spooning or scooping of softened carious material. - Carving amalgam or direct

Used for trimming excess restorative material on the gingival, facial or lingual margins of a proximal restoration or trimming and contouring the surface of class V restorations.

Produces magnified but slightly distorted image. - Concave surface mirror magnifies the image, requiring the clinician to learn to accommodate movement. - For endodontic purpose.

Uses:- - Indirect illumination. - Retraction - Indirect vision Different sizes of mouth mirrors Size 1: 16mm Size 2 : 18mm Size 3: 20mm Size 4: 22mm Size 5 : 24mm Size 4 and 5 are most commonly used

Sharp pointed hand instrument used to explore caries, overhanging edges and other defects. - May be single-ended or double-ended. Uses:- - Exploring lesion - For detecting and assessing carious lesion in 3 Periodontal probe:- - Detect and measure the depth of periodontal pockets. - In operative dentistry:-Used to determine the dimensions of instruments and of various features of preparations or restorations.

Tweezers/Cotton forceps - Hemostats - Articulating paper forceps

Locking tweezer - May have a locking device to maintain the beaks in a closed position until released. - This avoids the possibility of slippage whatever is carried by the tweezer.

3 Packing instrument:- Amalgam carrier:- • Amalgam carrier is a stainless steel instrument used for carrying mixed amalgam to the cavity. Use:- • Hollow tip of an amalgam carrier is inserted into the mixed amalgam to pack the carrier with amalgam. • It is then carried into the cavity and plunger is pressed injecting cylindrical pellets of amalgam.

Nibs may be 1 Of different shapes:- Round Elliptical Diamond Triangular Parallelogram Rectangular II Sizes vary considerably: Large round condenser Small round condenser III Depending on working end; (condenser face). Serrated-For spherical amalgam Non-serrated (smooth) - For admixed amalgam

Burnishing instruments:- • Hand instrument with rounded edges used to polish or burnish the surface of metallic restorations by rubbing. • Burnishing is the process of rubbing usually performed to make a surface shiny or lustrous. • Double-ended. • Nibs are spherical

Other uses: - Shape metal matrix bands so that they impart more desirable contours to restorations. - To "bend" cast gold near the margins to narrow the gap between the gold and the tooth (beaver tail).

Carving instruments:- - Hand instrument with a blade or nib used to contour the surface of filling material in their plastic state, waxes, models and patterns. e.g.- Hollenback carver (Knife-edged - elongated bibevelled) - Diamond (Frahm's) carver-Bibevelled cutting edge

Greatest versatility of movement. -More comfortable. -Limits application of pressure. Disadv:- Bracing is difficult because only the ring and little fingers are used. . Modified pen grasp

More control and precision. - Limited movement - Enhance bracing. - Gives the possibility of applying pressure precisely. Example: holding a hand piece for cutting incisal retention for Class III preparation on maxillary incisor.

Most valuable aid in operating inside and outside the mouth. -Allows greater ease of instrument movement. - More control against slippage during thrust stroke compared to palm and thumb grasp. - Grasping the handle under the first joint of the ring and little finger acts as a stabilizer. - More delicate manipulation.

Is to stabilize the hand and instrument by providing a firm fulcrum as movement are made to activate the instrument. • Is required for steady hand during operative procedures. Adv: • A good finger rest prevents injury and laceration of the gingiva and surrounding tissues. •The ring finger is preferred as finger rest.

Hand instruments or other items such as interproximal wedges used to protect soft tissue from contact with sharp cutting or abrasive instruments. . May be mouth mirror, check retractor, lip retractor or even the operator's own finger of the other hand. • This should be placed in the direction of movement of instrument. • Advantages: - Avoid accident slippage of instrument.

More pain - Prolong operative time -Less controllable - Reduce quality and precision in tooth preparation

Initial reshaping of badly damaged instrument Final sharpening

Silicon carbide: - Widely used as an industrial abrasive. - Used for grinding wheels, sand papers and sharpening stones. - Hard enough to cut steel but not to sharpen carbide instruments. - Available in medium and coarse grits. - Black or greenish black in color and require lubrication with oil.

Diamond:- - Hardest available abrasive. - Effective for cutting and shaping hard materials. - Used in sharpening carbide and steel instruments. - Diamond hones are small blocks of metal with fine diamond particles impregnated in the surface

This instrument moves a hone in a reciprocating motion at a slow speed, while the instrument is held at the appropriate angulation and supported by a rest. - This type of sharpener is very versatile, and can fill almost all instrument sharpening needs.

Few strokes - Less effort - Increase tactile sensitivity and operator control. - Prevent gouging of the root surfaces.

Hand cutting instruments are still important for finishing tooth preparations and thus hand cutting instruments remain an essential part of the armamentarium for quality restorative dentistry.
